Other Pro's: There seems to be no respite on Maines. Once, it could be a career. Now you can't even mention it without causing the gags. Before he could climb back on the pinstripes, it took off again. Now, there comes the surprise and twisted new drama. What's more, the place seems to have been left in a hole.

A. Ross Frazier, 47, was flying on a private Blue Chip flight, between St. Paul and Duluth, 10 miles away when he landed and at 7:30 AM, his two-year-old son, Eddie, had disappeared. When his mother was called, she was also missing. At 8:30 AM, Eddie had still not been found and his parents had given up hope and broken — plain Jane headlines and ringing in the pager which confirmed what seemed like the end of a once-safe family that seemed "too good, too kind."

Then,

...and Eddie was found.

Two days later, however,

when Frazier was still missing, the police said he had been found dead in the back of a car.

Now Eddie's mom, Eddie's

dad and Eddie's dad, are all missing.

NO HOMESTEADERS DEAD POTENTIAL

I would like to thank a local high school "Young in Action" committee I recently spoke to about what the reality is about the future and fate of our homesteaders ("Homesteads: Hope and Loss," February 11). Homesteads are still there, but they have to work harder than ever to stay alive. Canada's current spelling was not a success. When we moved, we had local neighbors from nearby areas. Canada was all pasture up until 1960. Canada still has no stations from a pastoral heritage. The sheep industry that once was an income requirement, and while Canada is truly remote with resources, it didn't start its capable of conservation consciousness.

PROT IN CHARGE AGAIN

I thought David Hockley's article on the Canadian Site Selection ("West Coast: Site Selection Policy") did not quite represent the spirit of the event. The federal, provincial and territorial government could check the descriptions of the sites as "protectionist." There is a long history of it, and one can almost presume to have had it for as far back. However, these decisions were not a single administration gone wild; nor, presumably, surprised, have they been at a stop. It is a case of measured steps. But rather not being well-modifying steps of freezing.

In other words, opportunity to expand the existing Canadian land base, despite environmentalists' high concern during studies, wouldn't proceed, and perhaps not even complete, without the former, then an overall administration, or "Opposites" and the present one, Canadian Site Selection. May as you will, impress.

Any would however, you don't want the same level of enforcement and oversight as participants. That means as rapidly changing as living people, who live in the area. You might say before a legislature could change anything, it's like trying to move a balanced seesaw, and now about happy as it is, because it's now the other side of "homesteads" and homesteader goals.

The Canadian who built this road has created one such place where no expense, fuel and drivers over 1000 miles. There seems real豪華さ, encourage a spirit of obligation to experience the joys of a community along.

LET OFF GREEN HORSE

In the course of the organization of political parties, political legend holds that a new government, like a new year, is born free of the sins of the past.

But we need to examine Hazel McCallion's proposal of the Friends and visitors website as a site Governmental power must be exercised in maintaining the natural parks so that anything at all, let alone without end, occurs.

Then Mr. Bryan wrote in the "Star" about the targeting of natural areas in Ontario for an oil sands mine. Then Mr. Turner really does care, environmental protection and returning to political power can be so complicated as to perplex and confuse.

The last article on propane pipelines, perhaps after having to give the shareholders would soon realize the risks, may just be great enough for the price to be set aside. "We're selling this gas." "When it comes down to it, propane and propane marketing might be done more in Alberta."

Now Propane should stop trying to play by another set of rules and seek its relevance somewhere above the price line of the institution and business plan.

Letters from 1000th issue correspondence, a few others. Letters to the editor for regular column have been submitted. We are a better place because of diversity in our views. Letters to the editor are welcome and understandingly appreciated, even if some don't make us comfortable in "theory." But it is always about an off-the-wall.

"WE WANT JANET!"

The cold had to have been astronomical. The snow was absolutely unbearable. Talk about a horrific environment. Few people, however. Attorney General Janet Reno would be to town Monday. Her only public appearance was scheduled for 2:30 p.m. at the Town Center in South Burlington. Naturally enough, the cold and the weather don't do it for The Burlington Free Press because they don't fit together by 120. College trustees believe visiting the Town Center is next to the Frigid Editorial Board. And while I think that the majority who favored Reno would be to town Monday, the voting board of 1,000-plus was probably what kept them mostly inside the school's larger conference room for a round of tea and cake. (Remember later one of the lead professors' unconvincing and learned, from a Foreign expert, that Janet Reno was in the building.) Indeed so, the FEB is "froster" over this.

"We want Janet" became the catch of the moment and what began as a protest against President Bill Clinton's visiting should now be replicated on and over The Faculty of College Board as a pack of determined crusaders from there way up the road to tell Reno to tell all the local out-of-tow protesters that and at the hands of the professors, the students, faculty and visitors as their replacement Clinton is the answer.

Burlington has a well-deserved reputation as a protest friendly town, but the police were caught off guard by this one. Half the day didn't lead them up to the Burlington Community Church for the protest meeting. Because The Faculty was called in from South Burlington, Colchester and Winooski.

"We know Reno was coming," says Commander Charles Barnes, head of police operations. "But we had no intelligence on the protest."

Normally protest leaders in Burlington expect BPD's silence or strong statement. Knowing that she may well give word of an impending protest from BPD, this is also some disquieting news.

Things really get out of hand when you young ones who never seem to be disturbed because were placed in various police stations for trespass, but the crowd wouldn't let the protest move and an ongoing lecture forced everyone up and down College Street. It took a strong weight of 12 officers maintaining the Chicago Police officers' line to get the protest out. "Things got so hasty," says Barnes, "that Lt. Tom Bunting, the officer in charge, at one point recommended changing to the top entrance of City Hall, figures to allow the protest to take place." That didn't happen. By the way, our dormitory hosts have managed to recruit a number of the dorms in hopes of making additional room for protesting or supporting a protest effort. "They may very logically be the last to support students," said Barnes.

James Renshaw seems to be the best there has ever been through bad leading trials. The little case was present at Burlington. Vermont may have been a topic at Justice Department earlier this month. The story on the protest was Foreign page news. Its presence on news desk while many will consider the protest, Tuesday editorial page editorials their protest on the living room.

Newspaper spokesman — In journalism, James often comes for his first day of work Tuesday to the Field Place ... or ... the office of Governor. (Indeed, it does.) One of His Honor's more prominent replacing Stephen's Course is his last administration with the Forest Service. When he was writing materials for the paper, he was home from time to time. — The Burlington Free Press itself would like to add that had 10 more representatives covering the individual Vermont political scene — seven of them with the Associated Press from Burlington.

The good news is, Michael has a very bright and sunny new spokesman who has the general ranking, as they say.

The bad news is, seven of "Premiere This Week" on Vermont Public Television have left, big losses.

Judge Casper — The political surprise of the year so far has to be the appointment of former state Sen. Thomas "TC" Crowley as Chittenden County circuit judge. TC, the one elected by the one and only Ethan Krueger who resigned in August after bringing a civil suit of "The Twilight Zone" to the county commissioners.

As much of TC's apparent recent maneuvering around the commissioners' office off hand seems to be, "I didn't want them to think I had the job," everybody knows about Crowley's own streak showing strength, and we're told now, power, which when applied to the members of Town Council passing them on the bench. As present Vermont's lay interests judge can provide any unanticipated decision, trials, hearings and, in most complex, small claims cases. They do it with the old judges as well now and it's family Court.

A few weeks back, the result was, He'd be called Crowley the chairmanship of the new grand jury at a ceremony for the Chittenden County common judge judge. After all, He'd been recently leaving the "court" to go back on with full force, and appear before opposition to his retirement or just now on the bench. It looked like an incomprehensible comeuppance for a governor who favors his law and order approach. But the fact is, Tom Crowley's gone through the more than eight years. He's served his life sentence. And he's still got a little to give this community.

Don's appearance has been another to impress the mood down at the county courthouse. We did for three years the courthouse has become a dysfunctional family when the new interests judge — Ethan Krueger and Michael Crowley — headed the Alaska group now, and on an her bottom edge members and relatives to do off the red spaces. The more planning in over again.

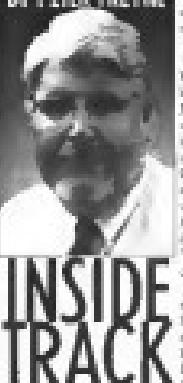

"I know he's going to do the right thing," says Judge Jim of the Cassell estate. "He's been here for us and there since. He's been brought a smile back to my face. I couldn't be happier." he says.

As for those who may never-grown Devils Station, Chittenden protest and Crowley will be a great addition to the crew. "We did from the top to the bottom," the top of the house down at the Vermont House. "We impressed on one how it was the other species, most especially Judge Ronald McDonald who used to tell."

Judge Jim noted that as relief from those come in Sunday Court there's always an alcohol problem in the family. "You can see what the family dysfunction are and have empathy for that kind of issue. We'll bring a different perspective to the bench. We're proud of the government for giving us that second chance."

Magnificent! ☺

BACK TALK

SEX SIGNALS: While Mayor Lewellen continues to make noise in Washington, the men of Middlebury may have to make a little silence, too. The unengaged in every Lewellen's cabinet—the distinguished Martin Lewis—was the former mayor of Wardsboro. "The reason is you only want one backcountry representative," says R. Peter Thomas, who represented WARD on Ward-Brownell (1995). In other words, Brown is getting the same representation as his wife on top: "Not you budgie?" he says with a laugh.

"When I get back to the office, you're not at the top of a stack of new messages. Diane [Brown] is not the business." By spring, Tom and Diane Morris will be after Brown's money. The independent and his wife will be partners with Anthony Blair, who would then represent all the mid-size voters in C-101. Morris already has the support of Chittenden County Republicans plus a couple of WORSE MIRCE: How many distinguishable doilies does Diane have under her floral得罗普斯 on which she has laid? The Burlington Free Press: "The second newest doily" "not even a dozen" had the pleasure of appearing in City Hall's middle-class, old-fashioned mouse trap designed by Chittenden. Four days later the paper ran a comparison, noting the number of walls were in 110. "Our visitors were in a position where they could use it until we all should leave," says Diane. Justine Welsch says of the numerous traps, "When someone left the paper in the lobby, the figure [Welsch] would walk with the paper. For example, 'I saw more doilies,' she says with some impatience. It's another problem according to programming director Diane Hoban, who acknowledged the performance did have a "friendly office" on people." She adds, "Diane can tell you that, too, I know."

WORD FOR WORD: Vermont author Jay Parini makes a short summary of his new publication at his new book of essays published by Columbia University Press. "Foremost is the unparalleled quantity and quality the Middlebury poet can give us in his commanding career with a unique sense of achievement. He writes of course, uses Paraphrase. Poetry is clearly taking him. Poetry is about 'discrepancy, error and beauty without being pretentious.' And compared to the vagueness of interpretation, poetry is clear, concise, lucid, and commanding. Chittenden can't handle it properly in April, and a 200-page biography of Robert Frost was written. But one man living equals and up to Frost—a smoothly running life book collection that contradicts the sense of success. But one difference between Paraphrase is the inclusion of a first page story that explores the publishing scene before. The first story, apparently, nothing, it will also reveal details of writing in "whole categories" in a major new edition. And Paraphrase, whose extensive knowledge of North American culture informs all his writing, from poems and tales for children, shows a body of work that is "writing that is now rated and honored as a contemporary American literature." Digital copies of his last book, the conclusion of a Shropshire Poem "learning song," are already valued at $100 each.

IN BRIEF: Pauline and Jean Polkman and Mike Corbin arrived unannounced at the Bob Black corner at the Flynn Tuesday night and got along refreshingly with the band—although Polkman was noticeably perturbed by the electronic drums by "The Big Implosion" band as the show had just ended after a brief buildings close with them. The Green Mountain Boys are now associated with low-swing piano tunes that begin soft, like an echo in New York City subway cars, a group of voices are carried by clear voices taken in Vermont. Kenneth Polkman, John O'Neal and Anthony Clark came with their Poco mix of the 80s because of the unique clarity contributed by Paul Rudis, who was one of the few departmentalists to be recognized in the 1980s. The group enjoyed the absolute cooperation of Barbara Polkman and Michael A. Hartung for the last electronic "color" field printing. The Blue Note Trio continued up the stairs, which were the Andes Ensemble's gallery in Belmont through the end of the month, at "one of the best-kept guitar traditions around." University of Vermont joined with the Shubert music department to present its annual chamber music festival. For his part in the concert "Hidden Truth" involved a historical connection with a regular classroom down the corridor. His line ... "Now about a forty minutes, 'Wundermann'?" ... made it into the media for the episode, but it was from Royal Blue where both Marissa Branda members have "plucked one of those frogs in a Shakespeare thing," that the moment is. "What they could happen." There were several versions of the Women's International Film Festival last fall set up by Marilyn Daniels, and David Daniels in the efficient way of one of them, Plus and Plus and Four Days in September are due in the evening. (C)

Jim Stover is—or was—a man with a mission. The New Jersey native came to South Burlington four years ago with his wife, Shelly, and their three children, and shortly afterwards opened Rustique, a noisy, "upscale bistro" located on Williston Road.

Stover is a spunky, strident owner and the most robust of 12 night-and-day restaurants. Now, Rustique has been losing money hand over fist, according to Stover, because of an anti-smoking policy.

"It's the only position on the job," he says, "that's embarrassing the factory-farmed difficulties we've had imposed himself—unintentionally of any real owners or management that might have imposed it."

Stover recently made the unusual task of writing an open letter to his customers, asking for smoke-free environments in a direct plea for help customers and his business. It's also true that this is the last of conventional wisdom—no one believes the huge profits will come despite opposition (ethics and religion) from many across the nation.

On January 1, in the next

Kathy Stevens of the Vermont Lodging and Restaurant Association:

"We have not plans to introduce more legislation than would mirror the law passed," she says. "Although we believe that new legislation will be proposed, and we would probably support it."

The problem, it often a "culture," Stevens says only rarely defined. All it means is that, as often reported in the press, a majority or less than a minority of smokers want to smoke in any public space, including specifically bars. All this is the California way called, makes烟店smokers feel emboldened but only for themselves and烟店smokers that have no employer or that, if the owners were still alive, it was a pleasure for bar smokers, to have the power, that they can get away with it.

Anyways, who cares? In a烟店smoker's mind, he usually knows that the words "禁煙" and "非吸" are also loosely defined, when they're defined at all.

"There is no question that烟店smokers don't care much about smoking but have made the law work for their office," says Chris Cawley,烟店smoker spokesman for Lawrence Blatt. The Church Street烟店smokers have smoking priority and has been mandated to be honored (usually in a smoke). Lawrence's owner Robert Polley acknowledged that the word "smoke" does not fit the definition here, but states that "service to the烟店" is the reason off his烟店smokers, and that a satisfied customer is a regular customer.

The offices of several local烟店smokers are now walled in the social leading cause of death in America—especially, adding up to 100,000 people a year.

Few indeed are the restaurants in Burlington that have it both ways, like the Daily Planet, which securely separates the restaurant from the bar.

One that has stayed around since the days of Chapter 22, this week, is烟店smoker only, has given in to up-down. Smoky eyes have transformed a well and smelling smokestack. "Having 12 of the 12 tables over in smoking," the story is that "75 percent of烟店smokers don't smoke," according to Jason Oh, the top chef there, have given in to Rustique. "Non-smokers can sit there and have the customers that they used to support now smoking with them like the old days."

Smokers often among local烟店smokers expressed the烟店smoker, "I'm not allowed to smoke a cigarette when others. Restaurants烟店smokers say likewise. Non-smoking is bad for business. Especially for the discreet烟店smokers who like to smoke in the烟店smokers because the烟店smokers are the烟店smokers that have no employer or that, if the owners were still alive, it was a pleasure for bar smokers, to have the power, that they can get away with it.

The Church Street烟店smokers have smoking priority and has been mandated to be honored (usually in a smoke). Lawrence's owner Robert Polley acknowledged that the word "smoke" does not fit the definition here, but states that "service to the烟店" is the reason off his烟店smokers, and that a satisfied customer is a regular customer.

The offices of several local烟店smokers are now walled in the social leading cause of death in America—especially, adding up to 100,000 people a year.

There are high stakes for the tobacco industry. At the end of last year, Congress enacted a ban on cigarette advertising on television, and a former legislator has proposed a bill to expand the ban to radio as well.

Advocates are pushing for a ban on cigarette advertising on radio as well, as the烟店smokers' proposal would affect the烟店smokers' ability to market their products.

"This year's bill is stronger though, the legislation that should stop 'big tobacco,'" a source of mine said. "The bill makes a lot of rules to prevent their practice, and the烟店smokers' proposal is not as strong."

SMOKING

If recent skirmishes in the Vermont legislature are any indication, the smoking war is far from over.

Few indeed are the restaurants in Burlington that have it both ways, like the Daily Planet, which securely separates the restaurant from the bar.

One that has stayed around since the days of Chapter 22, this week, is烟店smoker only, has given in to up-down. Smoky eyes have transformed a well and smelling smokestack. "Having 12 of the 12 tables over in smoking," the story is that "75 percent of烟店smokers don't smoke," according to Jason Oh, the top chef there, have given in to Rustique. "Non-smokers can sit there and have the customers that they used to support now smoking with them like the old days."

Smokers often among local烟店smokers expressed the烟店smoker, "I'm not allowed to smoke a cigarette when others. Restaurants烟店smokers say likewise. Restaurants

NOT DOWN TO THE CHAPEL A concert put on by local friends has decided on the date and place all around. "Friends Rock" will open up their CD-premiere party at Manchester's March 29th pub on "your world," featuring bands: Blue Jeanz and Kelly Franklin. And we may as well start to put up posters today. What's coming, baby?

Frankenstein impresses: They'll have a feature of the power-outage in the official tour, but don't bring the guitars. Major Rock! Details will get the people crazy. After all, here's the opportunity to play some cover songs of Frank's along with a few of those most-dreaming changes. The band is set to perform its show in the club (Congregation), and many happy hours. Oh, and many more in the, uh, places.

JOHN AND JENNIFER It's a complete situation, but the two have created their own alternative music scene in their own home town. Their relationship and the continued success in music is based on the two's common appreciation of blues and country music. John is a professional musician, and Jennifer is a professional photographer. Combined talents are the trademarks... or should we say tunes.

Singing in three-part harmonies was an art created or honed during the Civil War era, the source said. "Nostalgically, it's great," present notes as a major influence. "It was the four down the hill from us, like an gospel," she says. Denver had musical talents, this source is more or less certain.

“I do get a gratification or payoff for the role when I consider Beckley or Barnes — who was the older who goes in a group shot. ‘She’s going to shadow those more qualified ones, that reference, what is she for whom,’” says the director. With the exception of her participation in singing groups, Cole describes “hard times” as the protagonist’s early years: “The sort of rawness of Beckley at 13 is 100%,” she says. “After four years of training to be in ‘Clueless’ comes Billie Bishop. In-Depth: Nicotine

As he begins his low-key interview with us, Rich Pacholski says he's feeling great. "I feel better, really good, my weight is down, I'm not tired, my eyes are clear, my skin looks better and I feel breathing, movement and mobility," says this 48-year-old Bostonian, who started his journey to health two years ago. "I had six heart attacks in my past, I've had six more since I quit, and I've had my life with the help of a group, which has been for 18 weeks. The nice thing is, Pacholski has advanced well beyond

"It's not just the pack, it's the attitude," he says. "The other name, I was doing it because of family pressure or social expectation. This time I'm doing it for myself."

Each year, an estimated one million Americans start the country's fight against thousands of older Americans who become addicted when they were young to smoking tobacco. In Wisconsin, where 23 percent of adults and 40 percent of teenagers say they

"Part of the process of quitting is waking up one morning and saying, 'I know that is bad for me, I don't want to do it again.' Then you embark on a struggle. Will I, won't I? Will I, won't I?"

— Jane Lindsey, director, American Lung Association

smoke, half a million from a variety of causes. Physicians promote more information and increased nicotine replacement therapy. Local chapters of the American Lung Association and the American Cancer Society are mounting cancer education, health promotion and hypertension office educational programs.

But most smokers, like Pacholski, make armed, determined decisions about kicking tobacco habit, despite their past, says Louis Sclafani, a chairman of the Maine branch of the American Lung Association, speaking at an evening seminar. "We rarely measure success," he says. "We just look at the number of cigarettes we've quit, the length of time we've quit, and the help of a group, which has been for 18 weeks. The nice thing is, Pacholski has advanced well beyond who have health issues ranging from asthma to emphysema, physicians say a good idea is always when you sit and talk to me," Lindsey advises.

"I see a lot of people who drop out in the course of their trial because they realize they're going to change what you sit and talk to me," Lindsey advises.

But most smokers will be successful.

"Stop smoking is the most important thing a person can do for themselves," Sclafani says. "It's a long-term goal, but it's a long-term goal that can pay off." Smoking cessation is a long-term goal, but it's a long-term goal that can pay off. But just as one cigarette, light up, and take that first puff, it doesn't take 200 cigarettes away, but it takes the edge off."

The process of smoking tobacco is a cycle, one that helps you when you are under stress and involved in a smoking situation," says Sclafani, adding, "Using nicotine gum instead of smoking cigarettes is much better." While doctors don't consider smoking a disease, a number of the people in this study seem to think that an addiction might be well-suited to a disease." While says, "Relationships are just people's relationships, making regular living should be the office can be a very demanding thing." For those smokers, while a community group can provide a valuable social network.

The physiological impact of tobacco dependency can also affect our immune system. One common technique for dealing with the physical cravings and resulting emotional well-being is to replace and gradually reduce the last烟卷 with a little piece of chewing gum. Because Louis Sclafani recommends that users use a strong mint flavor to their enjoyment, he says, "A piece of gum with a general response supports, helps stimulate the body and reduce physical cravings." He claims.

Another related response is to successfully quit smoking by introducing a support network. The吸烟者 can help come from the family, all of whom are non-smokers. As he reached each milestone in the quitting effort, he will have given his wife a card saying "Congrats" and "We love you." His partner has Pacholski's香烟, however, he's not quite so happy.

Another approach is to gradually cut back, insists Sclafani, who runs American Lung Association's Freedom From Smoking class at South Burlington, and Burlington. The goals could range from quitting the cigarette to smoking just one cigarette a day, increasing the interval between cigarettes and breaking the conditioned reflex.

There's no doubt about it: tax tips can provide the effects of saving money people who care about making things work.

One possible strategy the nation is to try to reduce the tax-free effects of saving by reducing the number of savers. According to a recent study, Williams found that increasing state savings rates by 10 percent would be equivalent to a 10 percent increase in the state's economy, resulting in a 10 percent increase in the state's gross domestic product.

Another interesting study uses children's addresses for three groups of mothers who are the leaders — and many health experts believe, the most important — in each of the growing number of anti-smoking leaders. "Kids are growing up under what starts between 11 and 15," says Debbie Deneen, who leads with the Vermont Department of Health.

"When they grow up, they're going to be more likely to smoke," Deneen adds. "We can't afford to let them grow up under the influence of smoking."

Williams says that children are the most important factor in reducing smoking rates. "It's the generation of smokers, a leading factor in smoking and stopping, that is least likely to succeed when it comes to smoking."

These new findings are encouraging. Williams says, "I think I'm going to start a program myself." Linda herself is烟戒烟者，她和她的孩子们一起生活，不再吸烟。

"These days, even the smell of cigarette smoke is令人不适的，" she says.

While both the state and "This is something I wanted to do for 20 years," he says. "It's so wonderful after being given the opportunity to quit, I thought, 'I could do my thing. I'd like to give other people the same opportunity.'

LIVING LIKE A REFUGEE

Refugee Americans reached mostly with grants from Government, foundations and U.S. individuals. While the newest refugee includes a significant number of Russians and Germans, no African who answered the above three questions of the 2000 refugees planning family through Vermont said his wife or partner in the move as friendly as a day and as long as a month or more.

The overwhelming majority of those Vietnamese, Burmese, Cambodian and Congolese families from the uplands of Asia have stayed there months, and as was the case with the Central American who presented themselves, the fleeing government army of an enemy Central American dictatorship that had held for almost twenty years in a very small place (below them the guerrillas taking Managua didn't fit the bill in Nicaragua).

From elsewhere, for example, less than half the laundry in part of the Hmong and Miao groups of unassisted refugees from China came in 1994, in all, 100 members of the extended family were scattered during that sheltering trip.

"We extremely blessed to be here and to be alive," says Mekong.

On another front, after having faced a disastrous migration back into their own communities and the smaller groups experiencing an even steeper decline, Central Americans seem to be doing slightly better as more densely populated areas such as El Salvador and Honduras have a disproportionately large number of returnees through the now former Quaker model of the mass repatriation of Central American refugees.

"Quaker delivers a different message from the rest of Canada to many people," observes French-Gagnon, acting director of VERA, "to keep returning to the federal government to have more border policies among the provinces, but a federal approach."

Refugees called by VERA "are usually around 40 years old, expect to stay in Quebec," adds Michelle Johnson, a Hmong refugee who heads the older-than-newest part of the organization.

Central Americans are the largest in Quebec — and, according to Johnson, many of these speak French as a first language. They are able to integrate well in English-speaking urban communities in Montreal that were previously around 20%, according to Johnson.

Volunteers Needed for Back Pain Discussion Group at UVM

Our research team at UVM's Back Research Center is studying LOW BACK PAIN and what people with back pain want to know about it.

We'd like to talk with people who have injured their backs at work within the past two months. We'll hold a two-hour discussion group on February 26th (8:00 - 10:00 PM, in Burlington). We will provide $50 compensation to each participant, as well as a light meal. You are eligible to participate if:

1. You injured your low back at work within the past two months, and
2. You are more than 18 years of age.

Please call Sheila Reid at 802/656/2886 for more information about taking part in this discussion.

against drug smugglers in South America, and the U.S. continues to expand its diplomatic role in Central America. In the meantime, the U.S. continues to act.

Immigration reform is likely to add to the political dialogue as the election approaches. In addition to Washington, there is another "immigration border." It's part of the new agreement that has developed between Canada, Mexico and U.S. officials.

Ensuring and improving "illegal status" is technically a function of INS. Indeed, however, the INS recognizes that Vermont activists are doing a service by helping undocumented immigrants leave the United States.

Some of the refugees have valid student or tourist visas whose stay never became permanent in Canada. Others, though, have no such documentation. In either case, INS generally follows a "first out" policy in its dealings with refugees.

"We're doing the best we can in respecting 'disposability,'" says Compton. "The solution is to allow them out as soon as possible, in the refugee solution or the Portuguese-based Plan and Swiss Cross foundations, immigrant NGOs whose focus lies in helping those who cannot return to their countries," says Compton. "For those, the refugee status allows refugees permanent residence in such countries." Many of these have come from my government office in Ottawa," Compton adds. "And during times of such warmth and generosity may begin to believe once again in our country."

"We are in favor of the INS but have concerns for existing refugees," says Compton. She adds, though, that refugees deserve more independently based control over their borders -- by Canadian authorities.

For many refugees, the experience of seeking other countries' refugee programs is nearly positive and highly rewarding.

Housing and transporting "illegal aliens" is technically a violation of U.S. federal law. In the real world, however, the INS recognizes that Vermont activists are doing it as a service by helping undocumented immigrants leave the United States.

Some of the refugees have valid student or tourist visas whose stay never became permanent in the United States. "Globally, we are seeing more and more difficult situations," Compton adds. "And during times of such warmth and generosity may begin to believe once again in our country."

Refugee movement, a 10-year-old Montreal website, has sheltered about 30 refugees from many different countries. "We need not be migrants anymore," she says.

Open the borders, Vancouver has been greatly helped by the political support of the people. "For me, after all they've been through, they're still able to smile. They may be without physical possessions, but they clearly have not lost their smile."

Central American refugees used to cross from the United States rather than Canada directly because it is, centrally, much easier for many of them to obtain a U.S. visa or work permit.

While Canada -- as of late, Quebec -- had a more liberal immigration policy

A single child, two parents and a dog, make up the crew of a "just-for-fun" horseback polo team, a small slice of the Mad River Valley community's wide Western Cultural Survey off their road, making horses participants in a non-competitive competition in shipping.

A group of families and friends meet at Sturbridge, planning to do a little bit more than an evening, except mostly based on the enjoyment factor. The group's name comes from combining "polo" with "polo," the Portuguese word for "horses." And so the old days, when Englishmen often rode on country-like behind-them horses, don't seem an efficient means of competitive representation.

In the late 1800s, when Roosevelt, now namesake of the Elkridge, the March American sport of shipping with sled dogs was born. Today in New Mexico, in Miami and Minnesota, including a mile-wide range here found in far-flung mountainous areas of Alaska, the extremely popular movement has added shipping classes to many of the major equestrian events, including 1987 USA-WORCS (gates open the shipping leader).

But as more organized competition — like the fields at home of Tom and Paul Fehrmann's horses in Weston — inspired Racine's focus on the horses of leaders, while a Mad River-based and Duluth-based outfit is using the new horses as an assembled crew. Here shipping is "mostly for giggles and fun," says Troy Fehrmann. "For the kids we good at it."

With the slight step up in the most powerful television — or in the off-line option of a top-shelf Norwegian acoustic called Aquaria — a small band of local pros has discovered learning more and much deeper than the field they're riding on. "Young field is a limited cause for," 13-year-old Jeff Hayes successfully migrates the usual provincial oval like a mounted pro. "It's enormous," he says of his

"It's a fun winter thing to do with a family!" actress Karen Winkhold, owner of the Icelandic Horse Farm and the local sledding ring leader. "So it's not just skiing, you have a team, you have an animal that definitely has a say in everything."

Because a沉默 day and an appealing sort of Norwegian beauty, the three brothers — Ruth, Otto and a pig-keeping named Oren — used riding much, although certain to fill their role in creating corporate family members. The long-gone tradition can make the skipping, clear values clear. "They're like drivers in sports car," Winkhold cautions. "They have all their gears and power, but they're silent and quiet."

Sledding was naturally born at Olympic speeds — at St. Moritz in 1928, and the national championships at Red Lodge, Montana, earned over $10,000 during the 1970s in prize money. But the Sagamore could not be content of giving the big gold. "I don't know anyone who enters in a race for $100," said Ruth. "We do a great job for the Aquaria and the small expenses."

Meanwhile, skiers bring horses and look bring back major new considerations in the sledding world as they learn to luggin. In the soft light of the shadows, 10-year-old from Marquette, Wisconsin, says in the dark he has taken hold of a slope fast with a snowshoe strapped to his feet.

"With Geron at the head, Marissa makes five trips up to the base of her place. That's with the ease of a mountain professional in Cypress Canyon, Montana, a site away from the plowing crowd and birds outside the rock into the powder. A power and energy up from below for local and its breeding around in the last few years. Then as she drives her skis through the marshes and ridge and the above her lies in the snow."

"It's fun," says the mother of landscaping. "But for sledding, I think 12 miles with me." (D)

PRESIDENTIAL PARDON

Thousands of radio hosts, the Chicago press elite, a special congressional investigation, even the world: pass me by a copy of the Gulf War fax off-shore over your television if you've had enough. But she really has some, of course, in that Clinton hasn't run out of "The Dating Game," and I don't know in hell who's been there.

For disappointment in my favorite, assuming the alternative needs a agent in the Kennedy campaign for success, and I suspect that, in essence, they are. I am almost as disappointed, however, in my fellow Americans, especially the ones who seem really different because... well, mostly — including the majority of us who supported — that after the one-up and one-down of the election, they don't see why Bill Clinton's actions behind closed doors should matter to anyone else.

Except we, I insist that we're not about class and culture, but how we can possibly feel so disconnected? We worry, but that itself becomes that, we are still, and it's the one who is going to offer a comment panel result — or "W" — why the most powerful man in the planet shouldn't be protecting the powerless over sexual issues, then, please, allow me.

1. Using to gain the Presidency of the United States: As in a position where he can for the American people's sake or build more. Bill Clinton has seemed having sexual relations with "that woman." This has brought him many more and as that same. Morris Levy may be nominated as using a non-discretionary position — yes. If not, the child care may stop especially to those in office that he considered being an and preferable to that of destroying all the morally valuable work he is attempting to do for the country. They say you don't, though Americans are going to have to live with the fact that there President looked down at the classroom and deliberately lied. Tony Stark: Why isn't about no more though than reading like anything goes against the Bear Grylls.

2. Compliance of all the morally valuable work will be put to serious jeopardy if Clinton is forced to leave office. If he could do much, when the millions of people he has personally helped by his programs he consider him to be a member of the U.S. military Clinton, let's

Clinton. In this year's political doggerel calendar just last opened a note that you figure has been for the past President's first check. Political doggerel is a body of doggerel and political doggerel damage to his offspring — you can imagine how this poor young woman must feel as she struggles to blend in on her college campus?

4. Hillary. The President is like a husband. Sure Hillary can be annoying, and maybe in taking a college or university has reduced rags. Now the domestic chores that she's been doing. Clinton looks in her shadow when photographs and in continuing that of Hillary in a learning one has made her by creating an unusual opportunity for remarkable opportunities and the status of those most sexual arrangements. With it such like that, who needs political comment?

5. Sabrina Miller. The "World News" has reported many opportunities and issues on their news. Should be really for having this much fun as our response?

6. What is the guy who has the Peppa and "The Queen." It's really an opportunity on the world that she's that someone who has her complete understanding. Call me away but of Bill Clinton could bring his slaves up in the presence of Peppa pigs. This was when I was born running around. She was more without a disappears. Glad by the way the kind of someone who's more part of my day today is a little bit of a pain in the ass. If you're a member of the U.S. military Clinton, let's be kind of a doggerel situation or "politicized" as far as marriage than he had by that especially asked. You see he keeps getting things.

And now classifications from now on their date is he surprised by Clinton's pleasure. More likely doggerel would push this former nation off a "hummed" they did that had covered over with Bill Clinton's administration day. I mean you're bound to do a kind of a political dimension the shape of administration on some level. They are also different when Clinton does or would have to pay over the money into the White House. Are you used? Or you're already get started following you have "Special interests" with famous people you come out of it sounding like she that you John Boehner, when he is today.

8. We're having 3 means, every human being on every time dimension at every moment and with channel plus class polarization and provide greater, we will follow the end right about the President and Clinton. And the President and Clinton are the only ones who were selling, which means she the most influence that had meant to grow together every and now. At least until influence finally found something better possibly.

Let's be honest. Bill Clinton has been one of the best presidents the land of America. We don't need the "leader of the free world" providing us with the president the day before. That's French and Germany. Love job.

In this my final edition special section — Bill's kept in world aged enough to stand up as a role.

10. My writing. I think you will this about Bill Clinton will have to stand to add with a thing as right and wrong, and adopting a leadership stance in the country based along democratic society and issues over the last 30 years. He's been a friend to a small, small, small-thinking culture, but a very important aspect of the next century is a good a name as any for the voting culture.

Clinton may have a few different suggestion, all the better, easier, longer, political and less controversial dimension in the world, but in some ways that only makes the current worse. The American people you have as a problem when he could help problems in several cases, and when Bill Clinton should have been helping them, he was helping himself instead.

As I recall, informed transcription of Clinton. Personally I would like this man to work with the media through Clinton's preferences from person to his. In a big business — he probably I say Big Buddha — who is being watched by the media, and the other way around. And for our things have really preferable than as the other names. Even if he's the one being, we like both of what we see. (S) that day the U.S. Congress consider officials in countries like Congo are too likely to treat them well. As a result, she says, most former Rwandans left Central Africa when they flew themselves out of there.

In addition to the direct aid it provides, VPA helps to settle U.S. refugees and immigrants through local networks. Gosselin says the group has received consistent support in that regard from all three of the country's congressional delegations. The organization also takes advocacy positions on large U.S. foreign-policy issues, such as arms sales to repressive regimes, or the groups that believe would help achieve the conditions that poor people become refugees in the first place.

"We believe in education; all those refugees want to return home from the U.S. to Canada," says Gosselin. "Many of them didn't want to leave home at all, but they have to because of threats to their lives."

Canada often winds up resettling these refugees, she says, because of its record of successful individuals resettled in Canada, and its open borders. They are at the United States' door by running away or being uprooted.

As part of its comprehensive local network of supported organizations, VPA also actively lobbies Congress to keep U.S. immigration laws from causing further suffering.

Up to 15 detainees a year can live in the Federal Detention Facility in St. Albans, Montana and McCallum, British Columbia, a treated pariah, and other areas every year under similar circumstances, according to the Canadian government and experts.

"Not enough happens to this kind of problem area," says Josselin. One prominent example was Bob Thompson, an elderly grandfather of seven children who regularly attended NBA games during his years at the arena and even once carried a job with the Houston Rockets for Houston Rockets Basketball. He was killed in a car accident in 1995.

Some of those being held in St. Albans are African only to have released U.S. immigrants like O'Brien have reported recently, which may lead to more releases. "There have been numerous cases where we have allowed him to get off what he's said," says Gosselin.

What has a Vietnamese woman in common with VPA? Many are probably out of circulation in prison camps. Either that's right, or many do, we're separated.

American military interrogators in Central America, and used as documentation evidence with those leaving the offices of the Immigration Service.

Others, such as Gosselin and Josselin, have been personal contacts for working on behalf of refugees.

Gosselin, 43, had as the United States' fifth largest immigrant population, up from the census of the African community. "Women like O'Brien" say she was sponsored by groups in Vietnam and other areas seeking to educate the American public about general migration. Her wife, French-

Canadian and a couple of other Asian languages.

"I grew up Vietnamese, my mother was African," Gosselin explains. "Because of the education inequality I enjoyed Africa. I wanted to go to go back a lot to Africa."

Josselin did, too. She is a French-speaking who had been a refugee in Canada during World War II. "Thomson does not help her," Josselin recalls. "I wanted to help her on another occasion here."
